Sir:

Responsive to the Office Action dated April 8, 2003, the following remarks are made:

Applicants, in response to the requirement of election of species, elect to further prosecute in this case the species of Figs. 1a and 1b, in the event that no generic claim is finally held allowable. It is urged that Claims 1-8, 11, 12-15, 17 and 18 currently read on the elected species. Applicants thus elect the species in which the intrinsic conducting polymers (ICP's) form part of the capacity.

This response to the requirement of election of species is made with traverse. Reconsideration is therefore respectfully requested. It is believed that the claims specifically directed to the other Figures identified by the Examiner should be examined together and that the differences of species is not such as to require separate examinations. No separate search would be required because these embodiments include the same elements, i.e., a moisture sensor and ICP's, as set forth in the generic claim.
